CAREFUSION EMPLOYEES VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

Kieran T. Gallahue: CareFusion has been doing extremely well over the last several years as we have moved from what we call our “building the foundations for growth” phase into the next phase of accelerated growth.

This is an opportunity for us to take our vision of improving patient safety, reducing the cost of healthcare, our vision of doing that on a global basis – of touching every patient at some point during their life. It’s a wonderful opportunity for us to live the values that we have espoused from day one.

Vincent A. Forlenza: BD is doing this transaction because it brings together two great companies with aligned values, aligned products, and actually alignment geographically to solve a major issue for hospitals, which is improving medication management. We believe we can do that together, and we can do it better together.

BD is attracted to CareFusion because it’s a great company with values that are aligned to BD, with a focus on the customer that we really appreciated. And they have great products, they have great people, and we think we can put this together in a way that really does some fantastic things for customers.

KG: The scale of these two organizations together allows us to bring a broad range of products that can be delivered in a way that helps improve safety, that helps create greater visibility, and therefore standardization within the processes of providing care, and it allows us to accelerate the process of bringing those benefits to markets around the globe.

VF: Together, we can improve healthcare both in medication management and in procedural solutions. So a great example of that is we’ve been working for years in China to improve infusion therapy. We’ve trained thousands and thousands of nurses in China. We’ve done it narrowly. Now we can go back with infection-control products that you have, with the pump product lines, and really attack this on a broader basis.

KG: Together, we have a scale that allows us to accelerate that process of being able to improve patient safety and lower costs around the globe in a much shorter timeframe.

VF: The transaction is great for employees because it's about growth; it's about building a global leader. It's about the opportunity to have a real impact on healthcare – to work together with colleagues who share that same vision, and that's going to be exciting for people.

KG: When you look at our two organizations and our product line-up, the access and the history that BD has in markets around the globe are the type of relationships and the kind of access we wouldn't have for years. So we have these wonderful products that need the ability to get in the hands of clinicians around the globe.

All of us at CareFusion need to stay focused in this interim period. Over time, there will be plenty of questions asked and plenty of answers provided, and what I commit to the organization is that we will keep everybody updated on integration plans and how things are projected.

We've got a lot of customers that need to be served, we've got products that need to be installed, but please let's stay focused where we need to, which is on the customer.

VF: We're going to manage the integration by putting together a small team with executives from both companies. It's going to be led by a very experienced person, Bill Kozy, our Chief Operating Officer. It's going to be small for quick decision making to allow us to focus on both of our core businesses – that's the recipe for success.

KG: On the CareFusion side, we're going to have a very small team of individuals that are leaders within CareFusion, that understand the ins and outs of the organization, the processes, the people, so that we can identify the best of both organizations and how we connect those two in a way that most quickly and most effectively allows us to serve our patients and our customers.

VF: Together, we can make a difference in healthcare and we can do it globally.

KG: We are passionate about serving patients, about improving safety, about lowering the cost of care. BD has lived that on a global basis for many, many years. By putting these two organizations together, we have an accelerated process of reaching the common vision of both organizations. It's really a great combination.
